

Turning 18 checklist

- Make sure your school district has done a Chapter 688 referral.
- Apply for SSI (you can do this earlier if your child is in a residential placement, or if your family income is low enough) – make sure your child has less than $2000 in assets of his or her own. Getting SSI makes your child eligible for MassHealth (Medicaid).
- If you, the parent, are retired, you can apply for SSDI; there are fewer income restrictions and the benefits are higher, but SSDI does not make your child eligible for Medicaid, and SSI does. It can be possible to get both (up to a certain cap). SSDI will eventually make your child eligible for Medicare, but there are important services Medicare cannot be used for that Medicaid can – like residential services. It is important to try to get your child on Medicaid before you retire, to make sure it is possible to have both.
- At age 19, apply for MassHealth (Medicaid) if your child does not already receive it. Note this is MassHealth, not CommonHealth. Once your child is 19, eligibility is based on his/her own income. If your child is not eligible (for instance if s/he receives too much income through SSDI), s/he can buy into CommonHealth if s/he works at least 40 hours per month.
- Contact DDS (formerly DMR) about a review for eligibility for adult services. It is crucial that the people doing the review understand about any difficulties that affect the care of your child – “looking too good” during this process can hurt you and your child.
- If your child is a boy, you must register him for the draft – failure to do so can affect eligibility for some government benefits.
- Decide whether you want to have guardianship, or a less restrictive alternative (these include a health care proxy, a durable power of attorney, being named representative payee for your son or daughter’s government benefits.) Whatever you do, try to have it in place just before the birthday. After the birthday, your child is legally an adult, and you have no legal standing, including in the emergency room.
- Apply for a Section 8 housing voucher. There are two lists to sign up on: the centralized list, and one of the lists run by regional non-profits. It is important to do this as soon as possible after the child turns 18, as it can take 5 to 10 years to receive a voucher. You will also need to check in with the lists once a year or so to make sure you are still on it, as they purge this lists every couple of years (check in; do not re-apply, unless you have been purged – otherwise you will be moved to the bottom of the list.)
- If you decide not to get guardianship (or if only one parent acts as guardian), find out if your child is eligible for Adult Family Care. You can be paid up to $18,000 per year to care for your child (depending on the level of care needed). If your child is eligible for Adult Family Care, he or she should eventually be eligible for Group Adult Foster Care at age 22, which is an important source of funding.
